their chateau, or resting for the few weeks that they can tear themselves away from their accustomed haunts at the seaside. In August Paris is very much like New York in August, it is given up to strangers, the great shops display the refuse of the season, marked down,but not chesp at any price, and excepting on Sunday the boulevards and the "Bois" are occupied only by tourists and excursionists, in backs and Cook's caravans. Dressmakers are busy, for all Americans reserve a couple of weeks for Paris shopping and sightseeing, particularly the former, before starting for home, and as a really "good fit" is not to be bought, ready-made, even in Paris, the modistes, as a rule, must forego their vacation, very much to their own satisfaction, for Americans are profitable customers. Paris, for shopping, is not, however, all that it was; something of its glory, and all of its cheap-ness, has departed. The price of every article, the whole cost of living, is at least half as much more than it was eight or ten years ago, and there is no longer any standard or style, or au-thority, except that which is assured by successful caterers to popular taste. This is more reblican, but it detracts from the position which Paris has hitherto enjoyed of supremacy in the World of Fashion, while the enhance-ment of cost is gradually depriving it of the trade of that large class of persons who are not above selecting their goods in the cheapest PARIS NO LONGER FASHION'S THRONE.

London is to-day far in advance of Paris in this respect. It is undoubtedly the cheapest, and, in some respects, the very best market to buy in in the world, but it lacks the deft fingers of Paris, the eye for form, and the touch by which stiffness and awkwardness become grace. There is still something of this remain-ing in Paris, but it gives one a little shock to find one's tradition shaken, the distinctiveness and individuality of Paris departing, and the consusion and diversity reigning, which comes from running after strange gods—the gods of the heathen and the barbarian.

There was a time when Paris was a law unto itself, in regard to high fashion, but now Lon-don takes the lead in cloth suits and tailor-BARLY AUTUMN STYLES. Naturally the Parisian shopkeepers and purverors to American tastes are too wise not to provide something beside shopworn neckties, and heavily bordered handkerchhiefs and battered straw bonnets for patrons with ready money in their pockets. There are autumn "novelties" to choose from, if you do not care to expend yourself upon bargains d'occasion, and you will not have registered twenty-four hours without receiving polite notes of invitation from a dozen costume, lingerie and millinery houses, begging a visit of inspection, or offering to send a commissionaire with specimens of their wares for choice. Much pains taking, and the work of the summer, are put into these and the work of the summer, are put into these early designs and fabrics, which, however, are not truly French, but adaptations of skill to is, above all things, for novelty, or so it is supwear. The exceptions to this rule are the mod-ern rich and titled, who are fond of display, to whom the trappings of wealth are still new, and who have an ambition to vie with the rich Americaines. American ladies, long resident in Paris, acquire Parisian ways, and dress more richly, but more quietly, than those who come supressly for clothes that will surprise their tay-at-home friends.

These sensation styles are characterized by high contrasts, imitation laces and machine-baded trimmings, much drapery and many langling ornaments.

NEW MATERIALS AND EMBROIDERIES. If these styles are distasteful and thrown side with symptoms of disapproval better mes are produced, beautiful fabrics and embroideries, arranged so skilfully, in such happy combinations by a simple touch, that only poverty or a long experience in seeing without owning beautiful things, can resist a wish to appropriate them. It is the exquisite embroideries and bead work that are the crowning touch of costume. They occupy the fingers of busy workers all summer. Much the finest are made in convents. It is only sent to America as parts of dresses or costumes, for it is too costly to be sold in shops and besides requires the combination of the right kind and color of fabrics and the manipulation of the skilfull odiste, to put such costly work where it will do the most good—that is, show to the best ad-

A VISIT TO WORTH. Mr. Worth had only just returned from a trip to Trouville when I called upon him in the Rue PARIS, Sept. 21.—It is a little unfortunate de la Paix. "Oh," said he, "you American that the majority of Americans visiting Paris ladies are terrible! You are here to-day and only see it when Paris, fashionable Paris, 4s gone to-morrow. You arrive when it is too hot absent, enjoying the pleasures of the country at | to think and when one must stop to breathe, or die, and you want the cream of everything gathered up for you before the milk is set." Mr. Worth's styles are always different from anything one finds elsewhere. One of his designs was of yellow satin combined with brocade in pink and yellow tinted roses. A side panel, over which the yellow satin formed a certain drapery, was of plaited tulle, with fire and jewelled effects, outlined with fiat embroidered trimming of fine gold, and beads, colored in separate rows, from light to dark, not mixed.

A great deal of fine gold is used in his trimmings, and much coppery gold (chawdron) in conjunction with brown. He also uses Venetian stuffs in dark colors, and patterns of uncut velvet with dull satin, paneled with em. conjunction with brown. He also uses Venetian

An ail brown plush costume was buttoned at the side with gold buttons over a satin plaited skirt, enriched with slender velvet leaves outlined and veined with gold. The plush robe was embroidered with chinchilla and exhibited the buttons and simulated buttonholes, beautifully wrought, but only three or four were fastened, the rest of the skirt open-ed to show the rich satin skirt with its velvet and gold leafage. A pretty autumn suit was of gray wool and velvet, with gold, gray and bronze in the corded and rosaried passemen-

A DRESS FOR A YOUNG GIRL was of red velvet in bands upon red wool embroidered upon the edge of the velvet with blue wool in Kensington stitch. It is rather early yet for cloaks, but it seems to be decided that they will be either very short or very long, a medium size or length being usually commonplace in effect, and neither good for protection nor stylish dress. A striking theater cloak was of strawberry red brocade, lined with primrose brocaded satin, and trimmed with Venetian point and showers of small gold sequins which fell in deep point, reaching nearly to the waist, over the lace, at the back.

Mr. Worth's autumn mapties form a basque Mr. Worth's autumn mantles form a basque bodice at the back, and long ends, reaching nearly to the foot, in front. They are arranged to fit over a very bouffant skirt, and are en-made garments, and Germany popularises haus-frauen styles through its "bazar," which is republished in America. Altogether Paris is losing somewhat of its fashions' prestige and pre-eminence, and the position of authority will shortly be "To Let"—unless the Princess of Wales, as Queen of England and Empress of India, should succeed to the position.

It is almost impossible to tell what the foundation material is, they are so covered with wrought ornamentation, which fills in the outlines of simulated jacket braces or bodices, forming part of the design. The long cloaks are held in at the back, but the line in the doubled fold of a cape, forming the sleeve. ugly mandarin sleeves are disappearing, and the doubled fold of a cape, forming the sleeve, has largely taken the place, especially in cloth, as it gives an opportunity for the display of handsome striped or plain plush lining. The "Charity" cape, so called because the sleeve in effect is copied from old monastery garments used when the monks employed the sleeves as pockets in which to carry the loaf on a journey, or the food they begged from door to door, is or the food they begged from door to door, is much worn by young ladies as an independent little wrap; the lining of old gold, dull yellow, petunia, or plum-colored silk, forming a contrast to the soft, low-toned grays, fawns and browns in cloth, of which the cape is composed; a straight, high collar of velvet, lined with silk,

American buyers are at once the desire and the despair heard a policeman inform a person who took issue with him upon a point of fact that he did not handle the truth with sufficient carefulness of the French dealer and manufacturer. They spend liberally when they find what they want, but they are no longer so easily pleased as formerly, they do not accept everything as formerly, they all want something "original" and "exclusive," yet it must be enough like existing works not faithful with sufficient carefulness to meet the demands of veracity, I have oversheard no discussion upon the superiority of mind over matter or upon the whatness of the wherefore, but all the talk is of the respective merits of the Genesta and the Puritan and the superiority of the cutter over the sloop and vice modes not to startle, while not a few furnish insist upon having them carried out. The hats are generally narrow as well as tall, notwithstanding that the velvet, plush or cloth is not put on the foundation plain, but laid in folds, irregular, and, after forming a hollow center to one side, rather than at the back, where much of the trimming is now massed. But the folds are always lengthwise, and if not straight up and in Paris have a character of their own, but there is an entire absence of the mixed scrubby black, income is apt to array herself. Shop-girls dress largely in black, very simple in its character, the higher grades of attendants in shops, in black silk; two dresses of which per year, uniform in style, are furnished by the proprietors; then there is the conventional black, worn during Lent, and the black or white or some other color of the devotes who convents to herself to a cor-Lent, and the black or white or some other color of the devotee, who consecrates herself to a certain color for a time, in order to propitiate a saint or express thankfulness for good fortune. This is so common that there are shops devoted to clothing of this plous character, and one in the Rue de Clichy, the sign of which announces that it addresses the mothers of consecrated children—"aux mercs les enfants voues." When children are ill the mother frequently vows to dress them in the colors of the Virgin, blue and white, until it is a certain age, if the child's life is spared, and the girl or woman repeats this act of devotion at times after she is grown up. after she is grown up.

to the making of "Jerseys." If any one wants is only necessary to say that three thousand of them were shipped to New York a few days ago, and five hundred to one house in Philadelphia. The building, like many others, is in a court, and bears no exterior sign of being a business house, except the strip of red velvet carpet which covers the steps. You enter one of several reception rooms, handsomely furnished, and the wide windows of which look out upon a garden like many other Paris houses whose entrance is in a court. The lay figures standing about the room all wear Jerseys Jerseys in soft shades, exquisitely wear Jerseys, Jerseys in soft shades, exquisitely braided or embroidered, Jerseys with embroidered vests, or vests and high, close collars of velvet, Jerseys daintily trimmed with innumerable rows of fine gold cord or braid, or Jerseys where more than the state of whose merit was in cut, material and finish, the only ornament being the small gold, or rosary, buttons. The material generally used is a fine, close, yet elastic stockingette, of which also, most admirably fitting riding habits are made, most admirably fitting riding habits are made, these are the only exception to the Jersey and this was first made at the instance of customers, and is rather exceptional and to order. Otherwise, the business, the only one of the kind in Paris, is entirely confined to high class Jerseys, not necessarily the most costly or elaborate, but of fine material and perfect fit and workmanship. The Bon Marche, it is said by both French and Americans, does not share the general depression in business, but is steadily increasing in popularity. This is gratifying to know, because it is conducted upon such liberal principles, and does so much for the personal comfort and welfare of its employes. Its stables are one of the sights of Paris, the horses being as well cared for as the "Queen's own." Its methods are broadly humanitarian, and it is good to know that these can be made to pay in Paris as well as elsecan be made to pay in Paris as well as else-

JENNY JUNE. How Boston Has Changed. DECLINE OF THE CONCORD PHILOSOPHY AND DEVELOPMENT OF PHYSICAL CULTURE. Then the carpets should be brushed with the weaker solution. This, with great vigilance in watching for and destroying them, will finally exterminate them. Buffalo moths do not come from the little white millers, as many erroneously suppose, but from a curious do not come from the little white millers, as many erroneously suppose, but from a curious little beetle, which is, in shape and habits, like a lady-bug. The lady-bug, we all know, is red, with black spots; but the little bug which causes the buffalo moth is black, with red and white spots, or red spots, and a whitish line down the middle of its back, and is rather smaller than a lady-bug. Early in the spring they begin to creep out on the sunny window-sills. If you watch for and carefully destroy them you will be saved much after trouble, as the little, round, black furry creatures are far more destructive than the common moths. A hat worn one day, for instance, and returned to its box on the closet floor, may be taken out the next to find a large round hole in the black silk lining. When discovered to have been left two or three days, the whole lining would have been riddled. If these little creatures are known to be in the these little creatures are known to be in the these little creatures are known to be in the house one must keep constantly on the look-out, as they apper in very unexpected places, possibly in the center of a package of envelopes, or in a box of laces unopened for a few days. Dresses or clothes in closets must be taken down and brushed thoroughly two or three times a week. They seem to haunt particular spots, though one can find no reason for that particular spot being chosen. Turpentine or benzine only scatters them, but a strong solution of corrosive sublimate destroys them. stroys them.

will be ready to use in the morning. This being a deadly poison, the jar should be unmistakably labelled, both with a label pasted on and a tag, plainly written on both sides, tied on to the handle, and it should be kept carefully covered. The person using it must always wear gloves, as a slight scratch would be made very sore from it. They must take great care not to touch the face or eyes, either, with the gloves on or before washing the hands, after taking them off. When possible, it is better to

It may be used anywhere where you fear mather and on the most delicate the state of the same and on the most delicate the same and on the sa moths, and on the most delicate things without injuring them. Some delicate crimson satin parlor furniture was brushed over with this preparation, care being used to brush the under side of the chairs also, then it was covered with old muslin, wrapped in news-papers, and stored for two years, when it was unpacked. At the end of that time, a dust-pan full of dead moth millers were brushed off from it, but the furniture was uninjured. the sublimate having poisoned the millers as fast as they hatched. The walls and shelves of closets should be thoroughly brushed over with 1t, and any not-easily-gotten-at cracks snuff, tobacco, etc., are all very well for keeping moths out, but they will none of them prevent the hatching of moths, and the consequent ravages of the moths; for it is not the moths which get into things after they have been carefully put away which usually cause the trouble, but the hatching of the eggs which chance to have been put away in the things. Therefore, everything should be carefully sun-ned, brushed and thoroughly whipped or beaten before putting away, thus very materially lessening the chances of putting away eggs to make trouble afterwards. It this could e done in March, before the wee little white millers, which cause all the trouble, commence to fly, there would be little or no danger from moths, but with our very changeable springs warm garments are needed until later. As moths do not like printer's ink, they rarely attempt to penetrate anything wrapped in newspapers. The trunk into which the winter garments are to be put should also be brushed inside with corrosive sublimate. Then, if each garment is done up in newspapers, or they are carefully put between, a moth which may chance to hatch in one garment will not go through the whole trunk, but will be obliged to confine its rayarge to its constraint.

Not so did Billy Woodward, who is only a few months from County Donegal and possessed of the abundant natural curlosity of an Irish boy abroad. He got down from his high seat and began to study natural history. The snake tried to run away, but Billy "headed her off," as he said afterward. Once or twice the fugitive coiled and threatened to the boy's great delight. For fifteen minutes the teasing went on, and then the snake darted her teasing went on, and then the snake darted her head into a hole in the prairie sod. Perhaps a third of her length was concealed, while there came from underground a noise which the boy said sounded like "a queer kind of clucking." By the time he had got a trace chain loose the snake was out of the hole and wriggling slowly toward the uncut grass. Billy followed her up, "fetched her a couple of cracks" and supposed he sport was over. Later in the day a party of hunters came along and the boy exhibited his trophy, and told what he had seen. One of the hunters, a ranchman of varied experience, got out his pocket-knife, and with the remark that he guessed he could show the others something about rettlespakes they have become before about rattlesnakes they never knew before, stooped down and drew the sharp blade across the thickest fold of the dead snake. Out squirmed eleven young rattlers, all of a size, say eight inches long and as large around as a lead pencil. They were a very lively family, and had to be laid out one at a time. The ranchman said that when overtaken with her young the maternal rattler will, as a last means of protection, swallow the little ones. She calls them with a noise which is a combination of cluck and whistle. Very rarely does it happen that the act is witnessed. In all his experience the ranchman said he had never seen this snakeswallowing performance but once. Then he had come upon the mother snake and her young sunning among the stones. They had tried to get away, but failing, the young had glided into the mouth of the old one in response to the peculiar call, and had disappeared before his eyes. his eyes.
